Hungary

Trencsenyi, Balazs (Central European University, Budapest)

1. György Pray, Annales regum Hungariae (5 vols., Vienna, 1768—1770). Representative work of 18th c. Hungarian Jesuit historiography, can be considered the first "modern synthesis"
2. László Szalay, Magyarország története [History of Hungary], 6 vols. (Leipzig, Pest 1852-1859). Unfinished synthesis, among the first products of the "critical" historical method in Hungary, written by an important liberal politician and theoretician
3. Mihály Horváth, Magyarország történelme [History of Hungary], 8 vols. (Pest 1871-3) The canonic work of Hungarian liberal nationalism
4. Sándor Szilágyi (ed.), A magyar nemzet története [History of the Hungarian nation], 10 vols. (Budapest 1895-1898). Written in the triumphant tone of the

Hungarian Millennium, this synthesis combines positivist methodology with an underlying post-romantic narrative framework

5. Gyula Szekfű, A magyar állam életrajza [The biography of the Hungarian State] (Budapest 1918). A short synthesis, written for a German audience (originally published as Der Staat Ungarn), an attempt to apply Geistesgeschichte to the Hungarian context, seeking to integrate Hungarian history into the "Christian-Germanic" cultural community
6. Bálint Hóman, Gyula Szekfű, Magyar történet [Hungarian History], 7 vols. (Budapest 1928-1934) By far the most popular historical synthesis to date, using a tamed Geistesgeschichte perspective to narrate national history, bringing in social and cultural aspects, but eventually framing a conservative political narrative
7. István Szabó, A magyarság életrajza [The biography of the Hungarians] (Budapest 1942). The representative work of Hungarian Volksgeschichte.
8. Sándor Domanovszky (ed.), Magyar művelődéstörténet [Hungarian cultural history], 4 vols. (Budapest 1939-1943). Synthetic Hungarian Kulturgeschichte, coordinated by the top socio-economic historian of the inter-war period.
9. Zsigmond Pál Pach ed., Magyarország története tíz kötetben [History of Hungary in ten volumes] (Budapest 1976-) Synthesis of the Academy of Sciences of Socialist Hungary, bringing together the elite of the historical profession of the 1970-1980s.
10. "Magyarok Európában" [Hungarians in Europe] series (4 vols., the forth one was never published):
    a. Pál Engel, Beilleszkedés Európába, a kezdetektől 1440-ig. [Integration to Europe, from the beginnings to 1440] (Budapest 1990)
    b. Ferenc Szakály, Virágkor és hanyatlás, 1440-1711 [Flourishing and decline] (Budapest 1989)
    c. Domokos Kosáry, Újjáépítés és polgárosodás, 1711-1867 [Reconstruction and embourgeoisement] (Budapest 1990) Representative work of the search for new ways of narrating national history in the context of the post-Communist transition by key historians of the period

Romania

Antohi, Sorin (Orbis Tertius. Institute of Intercultural Studies, Bucharest)

1. A.D. Xenopol, Istoria românilor din Dacia traiană, vols. I-XII (Bucharest, 1925-1930). Covers the history of Romania from prehistory to 1866. The best work in this genre.
2. N. Iorga, Istoria românilor, vols. I-X (Bucharest 1936-1939). Erudite, occasionally Romantic, sweeping and detailed in the same time. Iorga has written other syntheses – some of them less overwhelming – of the history of Romania, in Romanian, German, French. This one has a French version.

3. C.C.Giurescu, Istoria românilor, vols. I-III (Bucharest, 1938-1946). Excellent, critical, unfortunately left unfinished.
4. C.C.Giurescu and Dinu C. Giurescu, Istoria românilor, vols. I-II (Bucharest 1974-1976). A synthesis authored by two gifted historians, father and son. Left unfinished, it stops ca. 1600.
5. Robert W. Seton-Watson, A History of the Romanians (Cambridge 1934)
6. Keith Hitchins, Romania, 1866-1947 (Oxford 1994)
7. Keith Hitchins, The Romanians, 1774-1866 (Oxford 1996)
8. Vlad Georgescu, The Romanians. A History (Ohio 1991)
9. Florin Constantiniu, O istorie sinceră a poporului român (Bucharest, 1997)

1 and 2 had achieved canonical status before WWII, have been banned by the Party until the early sixties. A critical new edition of 1 was undertaken in the 1980s. Other synthetic works by Iorga were also undertaken at that time. 3 and 4 have been influential, but less known outside specialist circles. For the larger educated public, 3 and 4, respectively, have compact counterparts by the same authors. No other works, individual or collective, have ever compared to the first four on the list. During the Communist period, the „Party narrative" – first a Marxist historical vulgate, after the mid-sixties a National Communist one – was anything but a reliable reference, as it was unwriting and rewriting (as Orwell put it), rather than writing history. After 1990, a few (all unsuccessful, some controversial as well) attempts at a synthesis of national history were made, including a revamped multi-volume collective work—ambitiously titled „treatise"—under the aegis of the Romanian Academy. The treatise was severely criticized for its many failures, ranging from plagiarisms to the „cannibalization"of previously published stuff released under censorship and was ultimately forgotten. From among the few Romanians who have tried to offer compact syntheses, Vlad Georgescu (1937-1988) deserves a special mention, especially for the quality of his vision. After „defecting" to the West and ending up at Radio Free Europe, Georgescu published such a work in Romanian. From among the similar, one-author works published after 1989, one deserves recognition (especially for its competent, straightforward coverage of controversial issues): Florin Constantiniu.

Nos 1. and 2. were the main works of the protagonists of two different conceptions of Swedish history, and Fryxell used the term "aristokratfördömandet" (the condemnation of aristocracy) to characterize his opponent Geijer's perspective. No 4., a 40-page article, really a research-program, by Hjärne, initiated the so called "Karl XII-renässansen" (the renaissance for Charles XII), i.e. a renewed, and less critical, view of the king Charles XII. With intermittent flares the debate has continued into our days, regarding how to evaluate Swedish kings, thus being reminiscent of the discussion mentioned above). The medieval, source-critical studies by Weibull, initiated both a debate regarding the strictness of source-criticism, and also an animosity between, two, putatively, "schools", lingering into the 1950s and 60s. Nos 3. (for lower grades) and 8. (for university level studies) are school- or text-books. Nos. 6. and 9. are - successful - books for a wide, popular audience.
